Cyber Security Advisory: Vivin XMRig cryptocurrency miner

This data is to be considered as TLP:AMBER

Our trusted partner has observed a threat actor named "Vivin" executing a variant of the XMRig cryptocurrency miner on victim hosts. Vivin makes minimal efforts to hide their actions, posting identifying markers, such as the same crypto wallet IDs as those found in the XMRig samples, on online forums in addition to using the same usernames for multiple accounts. Initial infection occurs through the execution of malware made to resemble commonly used productivity software, tools, and games. These files were all likely obtained through pirated software forums and websites. Many of the samples are packed as self-extracting RAR files which extract and install what appears to be the actual software, but also covertly drop malicious files.

As part of this execution chain, the malware also reaches out to "csrss.publicvpn[.]com," a known malicious domain, to establish a TCP connection. The prevalence of this domain and others that are lexically similar within other sample runs associated with Vivin leads to believe that these hosts act as a form of Command and Control. Finally, in addition to immediately running the malicious script, the dropper also creates a job using Windows Task Scheduler.

c:\windows\system32\schtasks.exe /create /sc minute /mo 30 /tn anydesk /tr c:\users\{username}\appdata\local\temp\setup.js

The malicious script contains an obfuscated PowerShell command that executes a number of cascading PowerShell calls and additional payload stage downloads. The PowerShell commands reflectively load an included malicious .NET assembly. The sample then calls the "exe" method of the "Hackitup" (Image 1) class within the loaded assembly, which performs more deobfuscation, in addition to performing some additional logic checks, such as whether it's running on a 32- or 64-bit architecture. The method call constructs the configuration options to be loaded and executed with its final payload by invoking "cmd.exe."

The final payload is a packed variant of the XMRig cryptominer. Examination of the reconstructed PE file reveals that it is compressed with UPX. Additionally, the miner is launched with a fairly default configuration that we were able to extract from the binary (Image 2). XMRig is setup to use a maximum of 80 percent of the host's CPU resources with the "CryptoNight" algorithm in order to mine the Monero cryptocurrency.

Analyst's

Notes:

Vivin's campaigns are indiscriminate, meant to infect as many hosts as possible with the XMRig cryptominer, extract as much money as possible, and rotate the wallet and infrastructure used upon too much exposure. The actor's activity exhibits a general lack of operational security (OpSec).

Cyber Security Advisory: Spelevo Exploit Kit Drops PsiXBot

This data is to be considered as TLP:AMBER

Our trusted partner has observed an increase in activity associated with the Spelevo exploit kit . Analyzing the network traffic shows that the attack chain begins with a request to celiac[.]site. The exploit kit then uses 302 cushioning, a common exploit kit technique that sends a 302 error response but sets the location of the malicious landing page in the location header in order to redirect the victim (see attached image redirect.png). In this case, the victim is redirected to the landing page, hxxp[:]//migit[.]flexiilmainen[.]info/1ge64dbkrpd4n4/kozjak-ninja-crown (see attached image landingpage.png). The landing page will attempt to do some reconnaissance and get information about the victim. In this instance, the payload is PsiXBot. PsiXBot is .NET malware that uses DNS over HTTPS to steal information and receive commands from a remote attacker. In order to hide what the adversaries are doing, most landing pages are heavily obfuscated.

Analyst's

Spelevo is a fairly new exploit kit(see attached image exploit.png) that was discovered in early 2019. Being only about a year old, we have yet to see Spelevo make any significant changes in behavior. Spelevo continues to use only two exploits including a Flash exploit (CVE-2018-15982) and a browser exploit (CVE-2018-8174). The exploit kit has also continued to use the same obfuscator to obfuscate their javascript (obfuscator.io).

Cyber Security Advisory: Emotet Weekly Hunt Report*

This data is to be considered as TLP:AMBER

Emotet is one of the most widely distributed and actively developed malware families used by cybercriminals. Its operators indiscriminately target individuals, companies, and government entities across the world, stealing financial data and other sensitive information. Emotet began as a banking trojan but now also functions as a dropper for other malware. The additional payloads can be used to achieve more lucrative attacks, and often include threats like additional banking trojans, information stealers, email harvesters, self-propagation mechanisms, and even ransomware.

Emotet is mostly spread through spam emails that contain embedded malicious URLs or weaponized PDF or Word attachments. Once downloaded, Emotet injects code into processes that are running on the system and connects to a command and control server to upload data and receive instructions for various follow-on activities, including downloading additional modules and malware onto the host. Emotet propagates across a network by brute forcing passwords, sending malspam messages that originate from the infected user's account, and leveraging the EternalBlue exploit to attack unpatched systems.

Analyst's Notes:

This report represents the observed activity of a week. These IoCs are derived from HIGH confidence Emotet observances. All identified IoCs are detailed in the report and may not be new.

Cyber Security Advisory: Ransomware actor threatens to publish stolen data in order to further compel victims to pay

This data is to be considered as TLP:AMBER

Our trusted partner has observed in several incident response engagements, an actor compromising victims, exfiltrating sensitive information, and deploying Maze ransomware. In some of the cases malware is typically delivered via phishing, where as in some cases the adversary used CobaltStrike, with a named pipe often associated with APT29. The attackers exfiltrated victim data via PowerShell to an FTP server, then deployed Maze ransomware. This aligns with recent public reporting on an actor called "TA2101", in instances, the adversaries used the threat of publishing stolen data to further extort victims into paying the ransom.

Analyst's

Notes:

The malware is typically delivered via phishing. It should be noted that exfiltrating data and using the threat of public disclosure to further pressure the victim to pay the ransom is a newly observed behavior for ransomware actors. This behavior indicates that cyber criminals are continuing to innovate their techniques and tactics to achieve their monetary goals.

Cyber Security Advisory: Exploitation attempts against CVE-2018-0296 in Cisco Adaptive Security Appliance (ASA) and Firepower Appliance

This data is to be considered as TLP: GREEN

Our trusted partner has observed a sudden spike in exploitation attempts against a specific vulnerability in Cisco Adaptive Security Appliance (ASA) and Firepower Appliance. The vulnerability, CVE-2018-0296, using Denial-of-Service and information disclosure directory traversal bug found in the web framework of the appliance. An attacker can use a specially crafted URL to cause the Adaptive Security Appliance (ASA) to reboot or disclose unauthenticated information. Ensure Snort signature is in place to detect this specific attack (46897). It is enabled in applicable policies that could detect this exploitation attempt.

Cyber Security Advisory: Weekly Mirai Activity Report
This data is to be considered as TLP: GREEN

Our trusted partner reported IoCs from statically analyzed Mirai samples identified over a week. There are a couple things to be aware of while looking at this data:

- * Network IoCs may be associated with binary distribution or one of the "cnc" or "report" functions.
- * Network IoCs are identified from newly identified samples but may themselves not necessarily be new.
- * Because of the nature of the static analysis there is MODERATE confidence in the accuracy of the network IoCs.
